A PRACTICE FOR PEOPLE WHO LEAD

The high achiever's emotional fitness check-in

A considered pause to notice the patterns shaping your energy, decisions, and relationships, and to choose one area to strengthen.

WELCOME

A starting point, not a score.

You already know how to push through. This guide is about something quieter: noticing what is happening inside you while you carry everything else. Set aside around thirty minutes, find somewhere you won't be interrupted, and move through the four parts at your own pace. You can also return to any part on its own.

01

Notice where you are

Eight honest statements to see how pressure is landing for you right now.

ABOUT 8 MINUTES

02

Recognise your patterns

Five prompts to explore what tends to drive your reactions and energy.

ABOUT 10 MINUTES

03

A simple daily practice

Pause. Notice. Choose. A five-step check-in, plus a seven-day tracker.

2 MINUTES A DAY

04

One practical next step

Turn what you noticed into one small, specific commitment for this week.

ABOUT 5 MINUTES

Answer for the last few weeks

Not your best day or your worst one. Notice what has been typical lately, and let that be enough.

Curiosity over judgement

Whatever you find is information, not a verdict. Emotional fitness is a skill you build over time, like any other you have already mastered.

01 / NOTICE WHERE YOU ARE

How is pressure landing lately?

Circle the number that feels most true for each statement: 1 rarely, 2 sometimes, 3 often, 4 most days, 5 almost always.

		RARELY				ALMOST ALWAYS
01	I notice early when pressure is starting to affect how I feel.	1	2	3	4	5
02	I can leave a little space between a strong feeling and my response.	1	2	3	4	5
03	I can switch my attention away from work when I choose to.	1	2	3	4	5
04	I can name what I need in a demanding moment, and ask for it.	1	2	3	4	5
05	My decisions reflect what matters to me, not only what is urgent.	1	2	3	4	5
06	Difficult conversations don't keep replaying long after they end.	1	2	3	4	5
07	I let people close to me see how I'm really doing.	1	2	3	4	5
08	I feel a sense of meaning in my work, not just momentum.	1	2	3	4	5

YOUR TOTAL

_____ / 40

8–18	Running on reserve. Pressure may be setting the pace. Part 03 is a gentle place to start.
19–29	Steady, with stretch points. Some areas feel solid; one or two may be asking for attention.
30–40	A strong foundation. Keep the practices that are working, and notice what protects them.

These ranges are a prompt for reflection, not an assessment. Your lowest-scoring statement is often the most useful one to explore in Part 02.

02 / RECOGNISE YOUR PATTERNS

Five prompts for a clearer picture.

You don't need to answer all five at once. Choose the prompt that feels most useful today and write without looking for a perfect answer.

1. When does my energy change?

What tends to happen just before I feel stretched, distracted, or depleted?

2. What is my first response under pressure?

Do I speed up, withdraw, take over, seek reassurance, or something else?

3. Which conversations stay with me?

What might they reveal about a value, boundary, or need that matters to me?

4. Where do I make room for recovery?

What helps me transition out of work, even briefly, and how often do I allow it?

5. What would a thoughtful response look like?

In one current situation, what might I choose if I had a little more space?

03 / A SIMPLE DAILY PRACTICE

Pause. Notice. Choose.

Use this two-minute check-in at a natural transition in your day: before a meeting, after a difficult conversation, or as you close your laptop.

01
Pause
Let your attention settle. Feel your feet on the floor, or follow one steady breath.

02
Name
What feeling, sensation, or thought is most present? Ordinary words are enough.

03
Ask
What might this moment be asking of me? Is there a need or boundary here?

04
Choose
What is one response I can take on purpose, rather than on autopilot?

05
Reflect
Afterwards, note what you learned. Return to it; don't try to perfect it.

Your seven-day tracker

Jot a few words each day. Patterns usually show up by the end of the week.

DAY	THE MOMENT	WHAT I NOTICED	WHAT I CHOSE

04 / ONE PRACTICAL NEXT STEP

What will you try this week?

Small and specific beats ambitious and vague. Choose one thing you could realistically do, and decide when you will look back on it.

A moment I want to meet differently:

One small practice I will make room for:

Who or what will help me keep to it:

When I will check in with myself again:
